Investing in Tobacco Control: A Guide for State Decisionmakers A Public Health Training Network Satellite Broadcast

February 15, 2001
1:00 p.m. – 3:00 p.m. E.S.T.

This live interactive broadcast will promote CDC's Office on Smoking and Health's recommendation that States establish tobacco control programs that are comprehensive, sustainable, and accountable. Staff members from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Office on Smoking and Health (CDC-OSH), State Tobacco Control Program Managers, and State decision-makers will share information on why a long-term commitment for State tobacco control programs is necessary and beneficial. In addition, this broadcast will illustrate what States can expect to achieve by following CDC's Best Practices guidelines.

AUDIENCE

This broadcast will provide clear, concise information to people responsible for making decisions about long-term commitment to tobacco control programs. This group includes State health officials, State health department staff, board members and staff of new State tobacco control foundations and commissions, officials involved in State budget issues, Gubernatorial staff, legislators and legislative staff, partner organizations, and community participants.

REGISTRATION INFORMATION

Registration is free. Further registration and site selection information will be forthcoming.
